

To Whom It May Concern,

I am writing today on behalf of Jana Malone, a student in my Principles of Game Design class. The class has focused primarily on modeling in Maya for the past few weeks and we are going to begin lessons in the Unreal Engine soon. She has applied to be considered for the National Science Foundation's Education and Training Application Program.

In the six weeks that classes have been in session, Jana has reliably turned in the due assignment and has been very diligent about making sure each task was done accurately. She has utilized the resources we have on campus to the fullest including tutoring and my office hours. She has given me the impression that she is highly motivated and knows what she wants to accomplish.
